

This was a difficult week for me because I was unable to apply the recorded audio to the animation very well. the first thing I did was an eye roll animation. In choosing the sound to attract the attention I chose the sound of a mobile phone message and the buzzing sound of mosquito so that the eyes would have a searching motion , but I couldn't find anything to make a sound like bleeding, so I didn't add a sound effect. I actually paid too much attention to animation rather than sound this week, reversing the priorities in processing, this led to my final assignment looking less like a sound processing theme and more like a animation assignment.

This week we did a group art book making. I got interested in the different forms of the book. As we had an afternoon to finish constructing story, decide style of the art book and thinking about how to present the final outcome, the discussion actually went very quickly then we started to work on the book. We spent a lot time making book than we discussing it, which was actually quite right decision , because it almost didn't finish in the end. It may be because we didn't thought it would take longer than we expected, but in the end the result was very satisfying and I gained a lot from this face-to-face meeting with group.
